Development Research Award 2014

Call for Completed Research Papers on

'Relevance of Korea's Development Experience for Developing Countries'

Do you have or are currently working on a research paper that investigates the South Korean growth experience and provides an analytical benchmark to analyze growth issues and prospects in developing countries?

You can apply now for the KOICA Development Research Award that is accepting submissions on this specific theme. GDN has launched the award with support from the Korea International Cooperation Agency (KOICA).

Deadline for Submissions of Completed Research Papers: April 15, 2014

- Winning submissions will receive monetary prizes of up to USD 8,000 and travel to Seoul, Korea in late summer 2014 to attend the prize distribution ceremony.
- Prizes in several categories including special prizes for best submissions from young researchers, women and researchers from the 26 Priority Partner Countries of the Korean Government.
- The prizes will be awarded based upon the academic quality, usefulness of the findings and conclusions and literary quality of the papers.

The Competition is open only to researchers who are nationals of eligible developing countries. For more information, visit www.gdn.int/koicawards
